Module Outlines 科目大綱#

Principles of Marketing 市場學原理

In this module, students will examine the application of the theory of marketing and marketing research in the planning of a marketing strategy (STDP) and marketing mix (the 4Ps) for a real product. Through this process, students will formulate a marketing plan and experience the creative journey that marketing professionals go through in their work.

Principles of Project Management 項目管理原理

This module will focus on the project life cycle and the essence of project management body of knowledge (PMBOK) to manage projects effectively and efficiently in any industry and organisation. Examples, scenarios, discussions and case studies will enhance the program delivery and give a holistic approach in understanding the entire module.

Accounting for Managers 會計管理

Accounting generally consists of financial and management accounting, as well as, financial management. Financial accounting explains how financial information is captured, used and reported in financial statements; management accounting concerns techniques for planning and control of business affairs; financial management examines capital appraisal techniques and their use in evaluating capital investment opportunities.

In this module, students will examine the implications of financial findings, behavioural aspects of management accounting, as well as, profit returns and cash flows on decision-making within an organisation.

Business Statistic and Data-Driven Decision Making 商業統計及數據導向之決策管理

Businesses deal with large amounts of data to enable decisions to be made. It is important that data is collected in a valid manner and that decisions are based on sound statistical principles. Thus, there is a need to be aware of proper sampling techniques, the rules of probability and the fact that any decision made with incomplete information is prone to involve error. This module will introduce a variety of statistical techniques and show under which circumstances each should be used.

Principles of Human Resource Management 人力資源管理學原理

Human resource management is a strategic function that deals with organisational talent needs that are essential for success. Along with operations, marketing, financial management and administration; human resource management ranks as one of the important aspects of managing an organisation, regardless of the size and purpose.

Globalisation and the World Economy 全球化與世界經濟

This module introduces students to international business and the issues involved in globalisation. It facilitates students' discussion of the trade and investment environment in which international business occurs and focuses on how national differences in political economy and culture influence global trade.

Principles of Management 管理學原理

Management is the study of how organisations set in place people, structures, and processes to utilise resources efficiently and effectively to accomplish desired goals and objectives. This is particularly important as competition, globalisation, and demographic and cultural changes become more prevalent. As future managers, students need to be able to carry out the four primary functions of planning, organising, leading and controlling.

In this module, students will examine how organisations function, as well as, managers' decision-making in order to lead and motivate their teams toward achieving organisational goals in a range of industries.

Principles of Economics 經濟學原理

In this module, students will examine various economic concepts, economic models, and other analytical tools that are useful for economic analysis and economic environment research so that they may draw conclusions about organisations' business performance and implications of policies. This skill set will be of great relevance to facilitate the development of business plans and for overcoming business challenges.
